CARE AND DILIGENCE

The diligence and care with which we should attend to our affairs is very different from anxiety. Care and diligence are compatible with tranquility and peace of mind; anxiety, over-carefulness and agitation are not.

Be careful and diligent in all your business, for God who has given it to you would want it done well. But avoid anxiety, do not hurry and excite yourself.

Nothing was ever done well that was done with haste and impetuosity. The old proverb is "make haste slowly". Try to meet the occupations facing you quietly; do them one after the other. If you try to do them all at once or in confusion, your spirit will be so overcharged and depressed that it will probably sink under the burden without achieving anything.

In all your undertakings rely wholly on God's providence, through which alone they can succeed. But steadily seek on your part to cooperate with it. Then be satisfied that if you are trusting all to God, whatever happens will be best for you, whether it seems to your judgment good or bad.
